1. On 27 October 1953, the former Norddeutsche Maschinenfabrik (North German Machine Factory) in Luckenwalde still quartered about 500 soldiers wearing red-bordered black epaulets. As only the second and third floors of the quartering buildings were lighted at night and the two low buildings were unlighted, source believed that the barracks installation was occupied below capacity. From 20 to 27 October, about 60 officers were daily seen walking from the machine factory toward the Am Schieferling officers' billets. From 21 to 27 October, [REDACTED] noted limited marksmanship training in the factory area and saw several detachments of up to about 100 soldiers marching out to the wooded area south of the factory. ¹
